

Preparing to Apply for Jobs in Halliburton

Halliburton was founded in 1919 and today is one of the world's largest companies in the energy industry. The company operates in over 70 countries and has more than 50,000 employees worldwide. Halliburton jobs are available all over the world within two sectors. The first is their Global Business Units, which design the advanced technologies that help customers drill and produce oil and natural gas wells with a greener approach. Halliburton also has their support services division, which includes marketing, IT, manufacturing, and finance.

Those that have skills in the areas that the company is seeking can certainly find Halliburton jobs, regardless of your location. In addition, Halliburton careers are offered to recent college graduates as a chance to furthering their skills.

Competition is Always a Factor

When you are considering Halliburton careers, you should know that other candidates are also considering the same thing, which is why you need to stand out from the crowd. Competition for any upper level position with a large company is going to be more competitive than ever.

When you know you are qualified for a specific position, the first thing you need to do is check your resume to make sure it is presenting you in your best light. Often people that are highly qualified are passed over for Halliburton careers because they did not take the time to prepare properly before they applied. Never make the mistake of thinking your skills and education is enough to get you in for an interview. A lot of weight is placed on the presentation of your resume; therefore, you might do well by having your resume prepared by a certified resume writer.

Interviewing

Moreover, when you are seeking jobs at Halliburton, you should make sure your interviewing skills are above average. It is normal to get nervous before an interview, but one way to counter this is by practicing tough interview questions with a friend before the interview. Think about past interviews, did you trip up on some of the questions that were posed to you? One of the questions that people trip up on is, "Tell me a little about yourself" many people start babbling about their families, pets, and a whole list of items that have nothing to do with the job. Therefore, when asked "Tell me little about yourself" what the interviewer is really asking is "Tell me about your recent work and some of your achievements" when you keep it in the work context, you can answer the questions much easier.

In addition, wherever you interview, you should not be speaking about personal aspects of your life for any of the interview questions because the interviewer does not care, all they are concerned with is if you can do the position for which you are applying.

Moreover, during your interview, do not appear desperate to land jobs at Halliburton because your desperation will come across in the interview. Even if you need a job desperately and know you are the best-qualified candidate, keep a professional demeanor at all times. When you appear desperate, the interviewer is left to think that maybe you are just taking any job because you are in a bind.

Remember, that after the interview it is a good idea to follow up after a couple weeks because this lets the employer know of your continued interest. Additionally, directly after the interview, you should send a thank you note with a handwritten message and mail it to the person(s) that interviewed you. Too many people have stopped following up with a thank you card but it is essential. When you send the thank you card, always reiterate something you mentioned in the interview or something you failed to mention. Though you want to keep it short, it is just a way of letting the employer know you have what it takes.

Finally, there are always jobs at Halliburton that are open because the company is so large, the key is finding where you fit and what the best position is for you and your background.
