

Hound.com Joins Social Networking Site MySpace

September 24, 2007

Pasadena, CA—With social networking sites quickly becoming the future of connecting with everyone and anyone online, Hound.com (www.hound.com) has launched a profile on MySpace (www.myspace.com) to further reach its audience.

Now Hound.com users can easily access all of the latest updates and newly added jobs Hound.com has to offer while they browse their daily MySpace messages and comments. Bulletins about newly added jobs as well as blog postings reporting the most recent site updates and new features will allow friends of Hound.com to quickly and easily link to what's happening on the site in real time.

Hound.com has thousands of users who are already visiting and scouring the site for jobs multiple times per week. Hound.com's MySpace page will give users another route to access what the site has to offer.

"Millions of job seekers and professionals from all industries are on MySpace," said CEO Harrison Barnes. "We're bringing Hound.com to the community on a site that many people already visit on a daily basis. We want Hound.com to be that much more accessible to our users."

More importantly, Hound.com on MySpace will also allow all types of job seekers to connect with one another. Hound.com friends can meet and share the latest job-seeking information and news, which will provide invaluable opportunities for networking.

Furthermore, Hound.com on MySpace will open new lines of communication between the site and its audience. Friends of Hound.com can post comments about the site and their experiences using it. Hound.com friends can also utilize the profile to submit site feedback, suggestions, and questions they have about the job-search site's services.

Hound.com, which only features jobs from employer webpages, was launched on March 1, 2007, and is quickly becoming a job-seeking staple in many professionals' careers.
