

Two Tips on Being a Successful Healthcare Worker

Here are two tips on being a successful healthcare worker from someone who knows. Barbara Bergin, an Orthopedic Surgeon, shared with us two tips that she follows that has made her successful at what she does. Here is what she had to say:

"I always obey the golden rule (for healthcare as well as for life). I treat patients as I would want a member of my own family treated. If I recommend surgery for someone, I always go through the mental exercise of considering whether or not I would recommend that surgery for my child, husband, or my parents.

I always sit down when I enter a patient's room. I want them to know that when I'm there, in that room, I'm focused on them. Many doctors stay standing when they go in a room and it gives the patient the feeling that you're ready to walk out the door."
